

AFA Pass Along Sheet

Please print out this pass along sheet, fill in the call letters and phone number of your NBC affiliate, make copies and distribute in your Sunday school class and church.

New NBC show demeans Christians

Act now! Time is short! The program is scheduled to begin Friday, January 6.

Please call our local NBC affiliate and ask them not to carry “The Book of Daniel.”

Our NBC affiliate call letters are: _____

Their phone number is: _____

(Please note: NBC cannot force our local affiliate to carry this program. The decision to show this new program rests entirely with our local NBC affiliate.)

You can also send an email directly to NBC by visiting <http://www.afa.net>

While the public has not seen this new NBC series, here is a brief description of its contents taken from reviews in the secular media.

NBC is touting the “The Book of Daniel” with language that implies it is a serious drama about Christian people and the Christian faith. The main character is Daniel Webster, a drug-addicted Episcopal priest whose wife depends heavily on her mid-day martinis.

Webster regularly sees and talks with a very unconventional white-robed, bearded Jesus. The Webster family is rounded out by a 23-year-old homosexual Republican son, a 16-year-old drug dealing daughter, and a 16-year-old adopted son who is having sex with the bishop’s daughter. Webster’s lesbian secretary is sleeping with his sister-in-law.

NBC and the mainstream media call it “edgy,” “challenging” and “courageous.” The series is written by Jack Kenny, a practicing homosexual who describes himself as being “in Catholic recovery,” and is interested in Buddhist teachings about reincarnation and isn’t sure exactly how he defines God and/or Jesus. “I don’t necessarily know that all the myth surrounding him (Jesus) is true,” he said.

NBC considers the program a positive portrayal of Christ and Christians.